As aging populations grow throughout the world, the management of cardiovascular disease in the elderly is becoming increasingly complex. Drugs commonly used in the management of coronary heart disease, hypertension, and arrhythmia have pharmacokinetic and pharmacodynamic changes that can significantly alter the therapeutic outcome. As a consequence of these changes, and by taking many factors into account, physicians must use the lowest effective dose of medications. There have been advances in the diagnosis and treatment of cardiovascular disorders and in the development of research methodologies that have greatly improved our understanding of the pathophysiology of diseases and the therapeutic approach to disease. As the population of elderly continues to grow, clinicians will be faced with more and more patients whose illness is related to cardiovascular disease.Q: Store in R an object which contains data.table object I'm working with a data.table in R as follows: library(MASS) library(data.table) mtcars$hp

I do not know the exact location of my bombs and do not care if they detonate. I remember seeing them on Youtube. Boy I thought they were awesome. (My memory is not what it was!) I have spent hours researching how to build such devices and can get a working one. But what I have just been able to build is a pretty tame one. A simple device with electric motors, no heat source, no detonation materials and it just sits in a box on a stand. To get one to detonate would mean to make use of the heat/fire created by TNT which can be made up of any of the usual explosives; dynamite, TNT, RDX and I used magnesium strips to keep the magnesium fire going after the main charge has detonated but they are just candles. The reason TNT was used was to make it burn faster. It was a government institute that built it and used it as an example of what can be done. (I could be wrong!) As for stopping the timer, the bulb emits a blue light when its holding a charge. If the whole lamp goes out then there is either a fault or the charge has gone off. You can replace the bulb then. It will sit there and hopefully the owners will replace it. Can anyone explain why you need the timer to be round when it can be a plastic plate over 2 small motors? Building the device itself is pretty easy. I've
